BACKGROUND

When the COVID-19 pandemic struck, our city had to quickly shift our public meeting process, including how we engage our public during this time. In this time when so many seek to have their voices heard, the City of San José must strengthen communication strategies to ensure all residents have the opportunity to engage in virtual meetings of the City Council and its committees. Improvements are needed to enhance the audio and visual accessibility of public meetings through more culturally competent and consistent efforts. According to the San José Digital Inclusion Program¹, 95K of our residents lack internet access and 55% of our low income residents have no access to the internet. The digital divide should give us pause and ensure our methods are not exacerbating these barriers further. We should work towards digital inclusion by increasing participation for those who lack access to technology and need user support within our public process.

I believe the residents of San José and our city administration share the goal of having equitable access to the public process. Improved changes to the current process should be reviewed by the City Clerk and City Attorney with recommendations for improvement to be implemented no later than the first committee and Council meeting in August 2020. Finally, this pivot in the way we conduct our meetings is an opportunity for us to integrate these virtual improvements in the event when in-person meetings resume, allowing for us to continue to broaden participation in our civic process.
