RECOMMENDATION

Accept staff's report updating the Committee on the current status of the Economic Strategy.

BACKGROUND

In November of 2003, the San Jose City Council adopted the city's first comprehensive Economic Development Strategy (Strategy). The dot.com bust of 2001-02 had raised serious questions about prospects for the Silicon Valley economy and the role of the City in affecting its economic future. Moreover, City leaders saw aggressive competition from within the region and from other high-tech centers globally and knew they could not take future success for granted. The original 2003 Strategy, comprised of 15 bold goals designed to stimulate the local economy, helped focus the work of City staff across departments and create a common understanding around the importance of economic development.

Following the Great Recession, the City Council adopted an update to the Strategy in April of 2010 (Attachment A). The Strategy update further refined the 15 goals into 12, and attempted to strike a balance between aggressively regaining jobs and revenue and creating an outstanding business and living environment that can compete with the world's best cities over the long term. In addition to serving as a guide for staff's work across the Community and Economic Development City Service Area (CED CSA), the updated Strategy became a guiding framework for many of the major policy projects that have followed it, including the Envision 2040 General Plan Update in 2011.

Because of the dynamic nature of the local economy, both the original and updated Strategy were intended to consider a five-year period. On January 26, 2015, the Community and Economic Development Committee accepted staff's report on the accomplishments of the final Economic Strategy workplan for the January 2013-December 2014 period. Due to the ongoing strength of the economic cycle and the demands of major project and policy work at the time, staff did not recommend undertaking a major update of the Economic Strategy. The Committee agreed that the 12 Strategic Goals remained an appropriate organizing framework for the Departments that comprise the Community and Economic Development CSA and provided feedback to staff to proceed under the direction of the existing strategy.

The current economic cycle has continued to expand since staff last reported on the Economic Development Strategy, becoming the longest "trough to peak" expansion period in modern history. With this have come new opportunities and challenges that staff has continued incorporate into their ongoing workplans. This memorandum is intended to provide the Committee with an update on how staff are continuing to use, and align with, the Economic Strategy, and provide initial recommendations as to an appropriate timeframe for a potential update of the Strategy.

Following the Committee's acceptance of staff's report on the Economic Strategy in 2016, and approval of the proposed two-year workplan covering the period between March 2016 and March 2018, staff continued to pursue work items that delivered on the projects included. Attachment B provides a brief summary of those items that were completed within the two-year period, and which continue to be worked on today. The vast majority of work conceived under the workplan passed a significant milestone or was completed during this period, however, many of these topics remain significant today, and in many cases, some form of work continues.

Over the last year staff has also been working to make progress on existing and new City Council Policy Priorities, as well as responding to changing local conditions. Some of the major policy projects and strategic initiatives that either weren't a priority or have subsequently come into focus during this period include:

- Google/Diridon
- Development Services Transformation
- Development Fees and the Cost of Development
- Opening of Phase 2 of North San Jose
- Downtown EIR
- Housing Crisis Workplan
- Citywide, North San Jose, and Downtown Retail Studies
- Commercial Linkage Fee
- Climate Smart
- Small Business Displacement Strategy
- Residential Displacement Strategy
- San Jose Branding Initiative

As we approach the latter stages of the current economic cycle, different pressures have taken on a more significant role. Foremost amongst these is the impact of housing construction related to economic development. The challenge of providing housing for an expanding workforce, and ensuring equitable economic opportunities for existing residents, continues to be a significant one and this is reflected in the citywide prioritization of the Housing Crisis Workplan. The lack of availability of a diverse range of housing types has the potential to disrupt the regional economy as unemployment remains at historic lows, new workers move into the area, and some existing residents find the high cost of living unsustainable. As such, policy work that advances new housing opportunities or addresses the high cost of development will remain a priority over the next 12 months. In addition, responding to new and increased pressures throughout the City that have resulted from the sustained nature of the current economic cycle, and the impact it has on residents in existing neighborhoods, is rapidly becoming a policy priority. Staff is currently developing workplans that consider and address challenges related to residential displacement, small business displacement, and ensuring career preparation opportunities and pathways for residents across all skill levels.

Economic Conditions

Even in the context of a seemingly slowing national economy, San Jose/Silicon Valley has continued to demonstrate significant signs of growth throughout 2018. The San Jose economy has continued to grow along with the rest of the region. The number of jobs within the City have increased almost 20% between 2010 and 2018, and unemployment has fallen to 2.5% and below.

In addition to the table above, staff monitors a broad range of additional economic information that outlines the current state of the local economy. This information shows that even though the local economy continues to grow, San Jose continues to add employed residents at much faster rate than jobs, and that the number of jobs has a direct correlation to revenues that support City operations. As such, in addition to providing support and leadership to the residential development community, the City mustn't lose sight of its long term economic goals of balance growth that not only accommodates more residents, but also provides them opportunities to work in the community they live in, and delivers fiscally positive land uses that support sustainable City services. Staff will return to the Committee in the fall with a complete Community Economic Profile report that will provide additional detail and information.

Updating the Economic Strategy

As noted through the CED CSA's continued work in alignment with the prior Economic Strategy, staff believes that now is not the time undertake a wholesale update of the City's Economic Strategy. The first and second strategies were both developed during a time of economic instability as a means of guiding the City's growth out of a major economic slowdown. As the current economic cycle continues to mature, there is increased risk of a slowdown in the next 12-18 months. Staff's recommended approach is to continue to operate within the context of the existing Economic Strategy and focus planning and strategic work on areas of greatest need, including the Housing Crisis Workplan and the upcoming General Plan four-year review. The goals of the current Strategy align with much of the work currently being undertaken within the departments that formulate the CED CSA, and the Strategy is capable of provide continued guidance and direction in its current form.

EVALUATION AND FOLLOW-UP

Staff will return to the Committee in the fall to present the Community Economic Profile and provide an update on evolving economic conditions. Staff will return to the Committee to present further analysis on the appropriate timing and scope of an Economic Strategy Update in one year.
